The Shift Towards Hyper Learning

Two of the most important questions facing higher education today are: how should higher education institutions respond to the dramatic changes occurring in the world today? And, since the consumption and production of knowledge (that is, the learning process) is at the center of all educational institutions, how can higher education adapt and transform their teaching and learning practices and processes to best address these changes?

University World News SDG Hub

None of the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals or SDGs can be achieved without the contribution of higher education through research, teaching and community engagement. University World News is setting up an SDGs Hub to share best practice and report on the impact and challenges of this work.

Rethinking Humanity's Relationship to The Planet

Like all species on planet Earth, the story of humanity is the story of survival. However, unlike other species, the story of humanity is the story of overcoming the greatest of odds (perhaps a one hundred trillion to one outcome) to ..

War, Mobility and Displacement and its Impact on Higher Education

War, Mobility and Displacement and its Impact on Higher Education

This volume will explore how students are integrating in the universities of the host countries, the language difficulty that they might be facing and other cultural issues. It will also explore academics who are in exile and the hardship they are facing to remain attached to their profession. Degrees are often not recognized, and job prospects becomes limited for such students and academics.

Deadline:

Researchers and practitioners are invited to submit by 01st September 2022 a maximum 500-word chapter proposal that explains how the proposal fits into the book's scope and goals.
